In Another World is simply about how life is not always perfect, but there are always little moments that you can recall which bring you that happiness. What I have tried to do is write this song so that you can relate to it in different ways. For example, grief, heartbreak, and even just life feeling like it's going around in circles. I think life is so exciting, but for me you can never reach a 'peak' or a 'prime'. You can either move forwards or stay still. The ascending chorus symbolizes the excitement and quickly after it descends, and the excitement fades.

Before writing this song, I had the foundation of it emerging in my head. The introduction of the piano then brought it to life. The lyrics evolved naturally and weirdly I think it is lyrically the best song I have made. For me, lyrics are the most important part of my music, and I strive to have the best outcome possible. It's so important that they are correct, as if not, people may not be able to relate to the whole song, but they may be able to relate to just one line! That for me would make my day!
